Our Sound

Soul Circus Cowboys' first album, Lay It Down, quickly established the band as a musical force to be reckoned with. Critics and fans praised the record for its message and authenticity, the band for its astute musicianship, and the album as a collection of well-told stories, each crafted by songwriters who've "been there - done that." Soul Circus Cowboy's singles "Must've Had A Good Time" and "Iron and Steel" offer an equally eclectic combination of sounds, styles, and stories, all written (or co-written) by McKnight, the master storyteller. From the intense vocal delivery and to-the-point lyrics of "Last Train Running" to the emotionally wrenching, instrumentally charged "If You're Gonna Leave" and the band's loving cover of "Sundown," you're bound to feel moved. When you're wanting to dance, tracks like "Country Girls," "Boys Like Us" and "Knowing That Girl" round off the band's emotional edges, exposing a more polished, yet gutsier, grittier kind of country-rock.
